So God Made a Rancher

God said, "I need someone who is willing to get up every two hours for three months each spring to check calving heifers, do chores all day and then not miss the patient-teacher conference that night after supper. So God made a rancher.

I need somebody strong enough to toss 80-pound hay bales for hours, yet gentle enough to wipe a tear from his grandson's cheek when his pet cat dies. Somebody to face a blizzard and understand why the pickup won't start, miss lunch and be thankful for a late, cold supper. God said, I need somebody who can watch a four-day blizzard take half the calves, then have the optimism and spirit to say 'we'll find a way to keep going.

I need somebody who knows his horse will respond best to a gentle word and hand. Who can make a halter out of bailer twine, repair a leaky toilet, re-roof the machinery shed, find the wiring problem in the tack room and fix fence until he runs out of daylight. So God make a rancher.

God had to have somebody willing to drive a swather until noon and then run a bailer until 10 p.m. because rain was forecast, yet be willing to let his own crops go if his neighbor is sick and has 100 acres of alfalfa on the ground. So God make a rancher.

God said, I need somebody strong enough to change a tractor tire, yet gentle enough to help a lamb get its first drink of milk or lose a full day's work to comfort and care for his cow-dog and constant companion after it was kicked by a bull.

With a list of work that grows faster than can be accomplished, I need a man who has wisdom to keep his children understanding what is important in life. A man with smiling eyes set in a face weathered by Wyoming winds. I need a man who knows his wife is the most dependable help he'll every have and somebody who's thrilled to hear a son say 'I want to be a rancher too. So God made a rancher.
