

Debra Ann Reynolds

Debra Ann Feaks was born June 11, 1957, in Staples, Minnesota, to William and Marjorie (Kasper) Feakes, the oldest of their eight children. Debra attended many different high schools, and graduated in 1975 from Glyndon-Felton High School in Minnesota.

Debbie married Keith Anderson in 1977, and they welcomed their son Chris. She then later married Thomas Reynolds in 1984, and they welcomed two more children, Kip and Sara.

There are many things in life that brought Debbie great joy, including camping, cooking, gardening, eating at IHOP, and watching Barney with her grandchildren. Her children and grandchildren were the light of her life. She particularly loved teaching her grandchildren how to cook and passing on her recipes. There were also many lessons taught in the garden, while watching the birds.

Debbie is survived by her children, Chris (S.M) and children of Bottineau, ND, Kip (Barbie) of Wendell, MN, Sara (Bob) Seelye of Tioga, ND; grandchildren, Shayla, Marloe, Declan, Bexley, Waylon, and Cora; mother, Marjorie; and seven siblings.

When Great Trees Fall

By Maya Angelou

When great trees fall,
rocks on distant hills shudder,
lions hunker down
in tall grasses,
and even elephants
lumber after safety.
When great trees fall
in forests,
small things recoil into silence,
their senses
eroded beyond fear.
When great souls die,
the air around us becomes light, rare, sterile.
We breathe, briefly.
Our eyes, briefly,
see with
a hurtful clarity.
Our memory,
suddenly sharpened,
examines,
gnaws on kind words
unsaid,
promised walks
never taken.
Great souls die and our reality, bound to them, takes leave of us.

Our souls,
dependent upon their
nurture,
now shrink, wizened.
Our minds, formed
and informed by their radiance, fall away.
We are not so much maddened as reduced to the unutterable ignorance of dark, cold
caves.
And when great souls die,
after a period peace blooms, slowly and always irregularly. Spaces fill with a kind of soothing electric vibration.
Our senses, restored, never to be the same, whisper to us.
They existed. They existed.
We can be. Be and be better. For they existed.
