Key Concept for Spiritual Growth

If worship is the heart of spiritual life, it should inspire and nurture our spiritual lives daily—when we pray, study the Scriptures, and are engaged in corporate worship.

Trusting God

during Times of Change

Destructive ways to think about change:

I hate change. I'm afraid of change.

I don't like change.

I like to be in control of what is happening in my life.

I like the way things are right now, and I don't want them to change.

Change is a constant in all of our lives, and to resist it is like resisting the wind when it decides to blow

Constructive ways we can think about change that will help us navigate it with joy: I like change.

I believe the changes in my life will make things better.

I'm excited about seeing the results of this change.

I want to be all I can be and I know that change is part of the process.

I want it be where God wants me to be and that may require change.

After accepting that things are changing and beginning to think in a new way, you will find that God never closes one door without opening another—one that is beautiful in its time like the last one was.

A woman recently said, "The child I never thought would break my heart did, and the one I thought would, didn't." People don't always do what we thought they would do, and when this happens, it's one of the best times in life to trust God. People may change in ways that are difficult for us, but even those times can work out for good if we keep a positive attitude and continue to trust God.

God knows everything. Remember Elijah and all his changes. He trusted God and was at peace.
