He was born December 1st, 1947 in Cedar City, Utah, to Erma Marie (Nelson) and William Thomas Krueger, as the third of four children. His father was a National Park Ranger and Superintendent, and Roice grew up in different National Parks in Utah and Arizona.

Superintendent of what we now know as the Promontory Point National Monument, so the family moved to Brigham City, where he first met the girl he would later marry. He attended the Church College of Hawaii (now BYU Hawaii), from which he graduated summa cum laude in 1972.

Roice lived and worked in the U.S. and around the world, consulting and teaching with Stephen R. Covey. Under self-employment, he taught and consulted in Asia for the last 30 years. He befriended many people across the world and deeply treasured those friendships throughout his entire life.
