

In Loving Memory

As my family prepares to lose a beloved member to cancer, I can't help but notice all the collateral beauty. I believe death can hold its own beauty in that not only is it a reunion with our loved ones in Heaven, it can also be a beautiful reunion with our loved ones here on Earth as we come together to celebrate them. I am grateful to be able to see members of my family I otherwise would not. I'm grateful to have time. But mostly, I'm grateful for the knowledge that I will get to see my Aunt again and that she will be with all her loved ones until I do. I'm grateful for a loving Father in Heaven who comforts me every day and for the generations of ancestors that went before me that occasionally allow me to feel they are there.
