

Should You Be Romantic Every Day?

What do you think would happen in your marriage if you were romantic every day and not just occasionally throughout the year?

Well, here are some romantic ideas for every day.

Toast each other during dinner

What if during a few meals a month you told your spouse something about them that you love or appreciate? You don't need a special drink; any beverage will do.

Break your after-work routine.

What if you changed your after-work routine once-in-a-while to do something fun with your spouse?

Take pictures together

What if you made a special picture book on A Day in the Life of {insert your name}? It's fun to stroll down memory lane. Smartphones make this super easy.

Set aside interesting articles for your spouse

If you read something your spouse might find interesting, set it aside. If it's on the internet, send a link. This is an easy way for them to know you were thinking about them.

Do something thoughtful every day

Nothing says "I love you" like thoughtful romantic gestures. They can be as simple as making a cup of hot chocolate for your spouse or leaving a love note on their pillow - or even a post-it note on the mirror.

Be generous with compliments

Compliment your spouse often. We're not talking about flattery. We're talking about sincere compliments.

Dress up for your spouse

Most people tend to dress up for strangers or when going out but let themselves go around loved ones, which is okay. But what if you dressed to impress your spouse instead of someone who isn't nearly as special or important to you? Wear your spouse's favorite color, outfit or fragrance just for them.

Enjoy the intimacy of physical touch

There's a reason why physical touch is one of the five love languages. It's one of the BEST ways to make your spouse feel loved and wanted.

Start holding hands, hugging, snuggling, cuddling, and putting your arms around your spouse at every opportunity.

These tips show how easy it is to be romantic. You don't have to go out of your way, and it doesn't take a lot of work. You can easily incorporate more romantic gestures into your everyday life.
