

*Round and round they slowly drift,
off their track they never shift.
These two dancers left above,
whirling and twirling to not a tone.
The ballroom has all closed down,
and for years there has been no sound.
Round and round still they dance,
hoping for an occasional chance.
To show their love by stealing a kiss,
these two dancers in an eclipse.
If only they could agree,
they could be together happily.
But he in the darkness like the night,
and she always in the spotlight.
He is surrounded by sparkles off a ball,
that dance around the ballroom wall.
And she in her glory is so bright,
you see no stars as in the night.
Round and round they slowly glide,
off their track they never slide.*
