For Today

Spiritual Spinach

A man named Jim Campbell made an announcement in his church: “Good Samaritans are still alive and well.” That may not sound like an earth-shaking proclamation. But in an age where cynicism and deception seem to be on the rise, it can seem like very good news indeed. Jim, a retired teacher, had a good example to back up his claim.

A few weeks before, Jim’s wife, Pat, picked up their grandchildren, putting her cell phone on top of the car and drove off, not realizing she’d left it there. She drove onto a major thoroughfare, and when she accelerated, she heard something make a “thunk” noise, but she kept driving. When she reached her destination, Pat realized that she didn’t have her phone. She hurriedly returned and searched along the roadways and the neighborhood where her grandkids live, to no avail. Pat’s phone had photos of her grandkids and her trip to Australia!

While Pat continued to search for her phone, Jim got a call from a man who had found the phone along the road. When he was just getting off work, he saw the phone and made a U-turn, stopping traffic on the busy roadway to pick it up. That could have been dangerous, Jim noted. The man noticed that Jim had just called 4 minutes earlier, and so he dialed Jim. “I thought I was going to be talking to my wife,” Jim said. But the caller was a Good Samaritan. Jim arranged to meet the man.

“Nicest guy in the world,” Jim said of the phone-finder. The man didn’t want any reward, but Jim offered him $20, and the man said it wasn’t necessary. “Go have lunch,” Jim offered. The man—who’d worked a lot of hours during the past two weeks—agreed to do that and accepted the money.

Jim told the man this: “There are still really good people in the world and you’re one of them.” The man did more than retrieve a cell phone. He helped preserve Pat’s photos and gave Jim an encouraging story to share. He gladdened both of their hearts. And he serves as a reminder of the importance of helping others.

As Jesus said, go and do likewise.
