ALLEN-HALL MORTUARY

Come, lay her books and papers by,
She shall not need them more;
The ink shall dry upon her pen,
So softly close the door.
Her tired head, with locks of white,
And like the winter's sun.
Hath lain to peaceful rest tonight,
The mother's work is done.

Her work is done, no care tonight,
Her tranquil rest shall break;
Sweet dreams, and with the morning light,
On other shores she'll wake.
Her noble thoughts, her wise appeal,
Her works that battles won;
But God doth know the loss we feel.
The mother's work is done.

We feel it while we miss the hand
That made us brave to bear;
Perchance, in that near-touching land,
Her work did wait her there.
Perchance, when death its change hath wrought,
And this brief race is run,
Her voice again shall teach, who thought
The mother's work is done.
