

A Carpenter's Song

The carpenter puts his hands forth,
And speaks in a voice that is music,
The tenors of timber and trellice,
The baritone of brick and braces.

The carpenter meets on the level,
And speaks in a voice that lasts,
In foundations and frames,
In towns and cities everywhere.

The carpenter laments the job at end,
On hearing the echoes of his task,
Remembering the sounds of tools,
Remembering the conversation of men.

The carpenter departs on the square,
And never hears voices following him,
That say, "What immortal hand or eye
Could frame thy fearful symmetry?"
