IN LOVING MEMORY

BRIGHT TOMORROW

By Eileen Burbank

I remember being told it is not easy to climb up the hill.

But I didn't know the pebbles would cut into my feet so sharply...

Nor did I realize the steepness of the climb.

It is only your constant urging upward that makes it easier to bend in the wind of the approaching storm.

As rain begins to fall from darkened skies,
I lose ground and stumble back a foot or two.

It is now that I sustain the hardest fall.

My troubled heart contains the sobs no longer.

Through the heaving of my aching breast,

I feel a gentle touch upon my shoulder.

Stillness overcomes me... You are there.

Struggling to my feet amid the downpour, I quickly press on.

At length, the creeping sun winks from behind a cloud.

Its dazzling beauty leads me to the top.

There is hope of a bright tomorrow.
