

Minor in Architecture, 15 Units*

The Minor in Architecture is intended to introduce students to the fundamentals of architecture and develop appreciation for buildings, cities and environments and their role in society. It is open to all students at Washington University in St. Louis, regardless of their major. The minor includes a foundational coursework, such as "Architecture for Non-Architects," a course that provides an overview of the architecture discipline, highlighting contemporary issues of architecture worldwide, with a focus on introductory methods of design and representation. The minor also includes 3 units in architectural history, highlighting the importance of historical and cultural contexts. The remaining 9 units are structured as open architecture electives (A46 designation only), allowing students to explore more deeply their own interests. Students interested in the minor should contact the Minor Advisor, Catalina Freixas, freixas@wustl.edu.
