Research Focus

The objective of my research revolves around how the assemblage of collective living has been influenced by urbanization. Through this lens, my investigations are centered on regenerative ways of living, based on reflective, responsive, and reciprocal relationships, to confront the pressing challenges to the environment as well as the changing life parameters of urban citizens living in an urban environment today. As part of this research, I introduced the methodology of game making as an emerging syntax in the exploration and approach to urban life.

Research - Selected Projects

- ongoing-2020 Confront(ing) Urbanization - Architecture and the Pixel Palimpsest (funded research)
In continuation to my research, this project focuses on architecture as a spatial incubator to initiate change to the urban fabric. Architecture is seen here as a spatial interface that facilitates local interventions unfolding between human and non-human agents. Within this context I decode architectural types and typologies that could confront the current paradigm of urbanization, opening it to a different value system.
- ongoing-2022 Co-Ne(x)t - Game Development
To open my research to a wider audience, I am in the process of developing a game. This game is based on the creation of a common ground among all participants, human and non-human alike. Influenced and confronted by external and internal triggers the players are invited to negotiate their resources and make decisions that will shape their role as a participant of the collective. Through various forms of interaction between the agents, everyone will eventually become interconnected to one another, literally and figuratively speaking.
