

COVID-19 and Rule Breaking

During COVID-19 the Irish Government has put some rules in place to keep everyone safe.

These rules tell us what we can and can't do.

These rules will change every few weeks so that people can slowly start to do things they normally would again, like see friends and family.

Sometimes, people do not follow the rules. That can make me feel worried or frustrated.

I might see people standing too close together, or I might see people outside in groups.

There are lots of reasons why people might not follow the rules.

Sometimes there are 'exceptional reasons' which mean they have been allowed to do some things others aren't.

Sometimes people will just break the rules. Not everyone is as good as I am at following rules.

If I see someone breaking the rules I might feel annoyed or angry. This is ok.

If anyone is doing something they are not supposed to, it is the Gardai's job to ask them questions and make sure they are following the rules as best they can.

Even if other people are not good at following rules, I have been really good at doing what I am supposed to. I am being really helpful and keeping everyone around me safe and healthy.
