

Alyce's Legacy of Charity

In 2019, Alyce befriended many people in Africa through a worldwide penpal website. As she got to know them, she learned of their challenges in meeting basic needs like food, shelter, and clothing, and subsequently developed a series of programs to provide cooperative resources and education. These small grassroots programs became affectionately known as "The Co-ops." Alyce established Co-op groups in many countries in Africa, and through these groups, she has helped hundreds of individuals and families learn and practice principles of self reliance from across the globe with just her iPhone, persistence, faith, and prayer. Through her relationships with her friends in Africa (who lovingly refer to her as "Mummy"), she also shared the gospel and attended many baptisms via video chat, as well as contributed to the financial support of several missionaries who decided to serve as a result of her kindness and encouragement. Her family and friends in the United States are committed to helping the Co-op projects and missionary efforts continue.

The Co-op projects frequently need resources like seeds, small livestock, sewing machines, or tools to help establish and stabilize the programs. In lieu of flowers, please consider donating to Alyce's legacy Co-op projects in Africa.
