

When a Cowboy Rides Away

*When a cowboy rides away, he leaves the pain behind,
Breathing deep and free from struggle, peace within his mind.*

*He rides into the sunset, his work here now complete,
Hard work paid off, worries gone, his heart in calm retreat.*

*Memories swirl in the wind of the family so carefully raised,
Strong, independent souls, in their strength he's amazed.
Though stubborn like him, with hands tough and hearts true,
They'll carry on his role, just as he always knew.*

*He leaves behind traditions, passed down with loving care,
Like fishing at Devil's Creek, or a wild story he had to share.
Though he found his legs blown off in Vietnam's fight,
He left the lion in the field, just barely out of sight.*

*You never knew what he'd say next, or what trick that he'd pull,
And if you stood too close, he'd tug your hair or hat brim full.
But when you hear a country song, or catch his Elvis groove,
You'll know he's standing near, guiding your next move.*

*His devotion to family was unmatched, strong and true,
And he wants you to remember: he's always here for you.
The bond with his bride is forever unwavering and bright,
Though she can't see him now, he's never out of sight.*

*Just lift his binoculars and look towards the sky,
He'll be soaring in the breeze, a bird flying by.
Though his time here is over, Heaven's warmth now his home,
He's watching us with pride, grateful for all he's known.*
