In Loving Memory of

Elaine Broughton

We are not simply who and what we think,
but full of shadows, shapes the other cannot recognize or translate.
In the space of a day
we meet many times, as strangers, coming in and out of familiar rooms, I suddenly wonder where you may have got to, certainly this one is not the you I thought I knew.
One life might not be enough for us to get acquainted.
