

TWO FOREST TREES

By Mina Moss

Two trees stood close together in the woods.

They swayed as one with every wind that blew from north or south.
Their top most branches were so intertwined that when frost came,
all leaves dropped down to make a single carpet on the forest floor.

A storm-felled neighbor scarred both trees the same, and heavy winter snows forced both to lean toward downward slope.
When one tree was torn by Fate's sharp blows, the other stood alone, forever marked by closeness to its mate.

And so it is with me, now that you are gone. Although I stand in rain and summer sun and other's stand beside me, there is no thought I have, or move I make, that does not still reflect how marked I am from having stood so long with branches twined so close to you.
