

Questions more than answers. These 18 young artists might have come here four years ago seeking answers, but in the course of studying art, found only more questions. In the pages within, the questions posed to them near the end of their time at Yale, pre-pandemic, may seem flippant: What do you wear all the time? What was your last dream about? Most recent Google search? Far from it, these queries are prompts to share with the reader a slice of life at this most important a time - in the most uncertain of times. Without recording them here, these otherwise mundane details would be lost from memory. The responses, which are both visual and verbal, are student-generated, but so are those questions, voted on in a poll amongst the Class of 2020, narrowed down from a larger, brainstormed list just prior to Spring Break. These are the questions the group wish to pose to themselves at the precipice of graduation - and of entering into real life beyond the towers and halls of academic life. In these uncertain times, they must grasp control over their identities however they can, and express their innermost thoughts, feelings, fears and dreams in word and image, paper and ink. What is always going to be unfinished?

Eyebird. I had a period when I first got to college where it hit me how much of the content of our daily lives we allow to slip away into forever nothingness. It sort of gripped me with chilly dread. And I started to journal a lot, just so as not to lose everything. I've since achieved a zen. Now I appreciate the beauty of fallibility, and I trust that every moment and person touches their prints into my body, warmly or otherwise, somewhere inside where no wind will wipe them away. And I don't even have to try to make it happen, like breathing. But maybe that's just something I've convinced myself of in order to digest my failure as a diarist.

Going into this year, I have tried to become as truthful as I can possibly be because I think that even tiny, meaningless lies can have a negative impact. Especially in our current political climate, with a president who cannot separate fact from fiction, dishonesty from other people is also extremely frustrating.

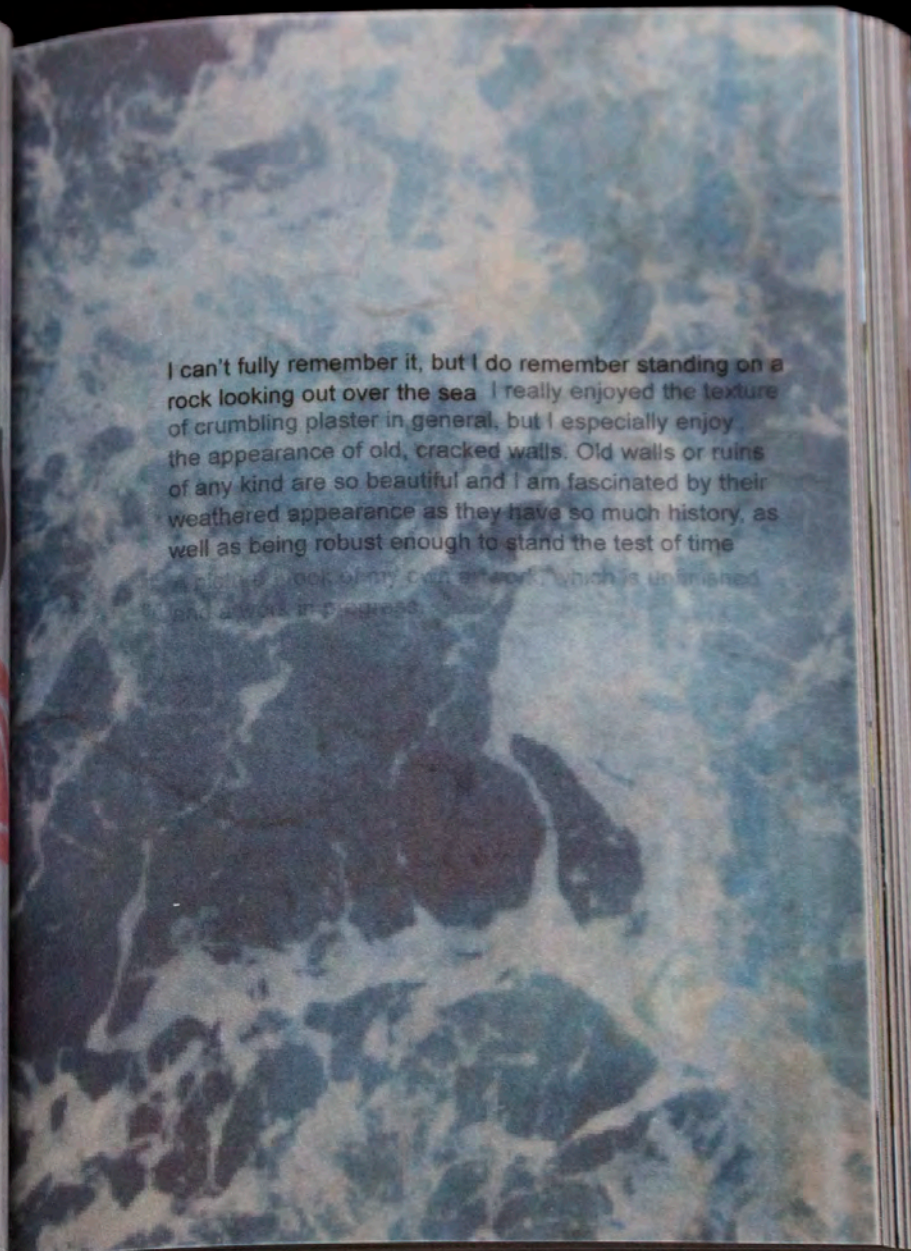

I can't fully remember what I did last year, but I do remember rock looking back at the end of the year, and I was so proud of myself for accomplishing so much. I was really happy and proud of myself for accomplishing so much. I was really happy and proud of myself for accomplishing so much.

I can't fully remember it, but I do remember standing on a rock looking out over the sea. I really enjoyed the texture of crumbling plaster in general, but I especially enjoy the appearance of old, cracked walls. Old walls or ruins of any kind are so beautiful and I am fascinated by their weathered appearance as they have so much history, as

These shapes have also made it into my paintings, as I am fascinated by how fire appears and how it can transform objects. For me, fire also symbolizes chaos, transition and destruction, which are themes I have tried to explore during my senior thesis. It is difficult to know exactly what you have forgotten, but I know that I have forgotten some childhood memories. In particular, I remember when I was a child we would always make daisy chains with friends in parks and outdoors. But of course, I cannot fully grasp those memories or what that was like or what me and my friends would talk about. So, the specifics of the memories are lost.

Someone (let's call her the curator / museum guide) comes and invites me to visit heaven. I'm very interested in this, almost as if I'd heard about this and was hoping I'd be able to see what it was all about. And to be fair, I'm not disappointed. Heaven is some big sunny estate in my grandparents' region. It's got a giant lawn, surrounded by warm stony buildings. One end of the lawn is the mortal world, and at the other end is a columned palace / museum that is the entrance to heaven itself. To its right, the park becomes taller with trees and shadow, more mysterious but not dangerous, only strange and knowing. To the left, the terrain slopes into country roads by a river. In that area are also Jesus' various houses, copies of the ones he'd had throughout his life. I think ultimately, if the back / front was earth / heaven then the left right was reason and unreason. I remember supposing with an older man who was marveling with me, that Jesus' houses probably went chronologically from back to front, with the manger near the world end of the lawn, and the tomb near the palace. at a professor for saying that I should be thankful for his education instead of doubting it, but which I stopped writing because I couldn't find a way not to make myself sound obnoxious.
